The Australasian Review of African Studies aims to publish authoritative, informed, critical material on Africa and African affairs that is both interesting and readable; and to balance specialist and more generalist articles and an interdisciplinary approach. Articles should usually be no more than 4,500-5000 words. Articles are peer reviewed. Short Notes up to 2,000 words on contemporary African issues and events are also welcome as are reports on research projects/reports, professional involvement in Africa, African university events, etc. Contributions must be written so as to be accessible to as wide a range of readers as possible. The journal's style sheet is now available, electronically or print copy, on request from the Editor. All contributions should be formatted to be compatible with Microsoft Word and sent electronically as an attachment or if this is not possible via the post on a floppy disk.

Views expressed in articles, reviews and notes published in ARAS do not necessarily reflect the views of AFSAAP, or of the Editor or the Editorial Advisory Board of ARAS.

All manuscripts and correspondence should be sent to:
The Editor, Australasian Review of African Studies,
Dept of Social Sciences, Curtin University of Technology,
GPO Box U1987 PERTH WA 6845
Email: C.Gertzel@exchange.curtin.edu.au

Articles that appear in the Review are abstracted in the ASSIA (the Applied Social Sciences Index and Abstracts).

The African Studies Association of Australasia and the Pacific (AFSAAP) wish to acknowledge the gracious permission of Professor Frank Willett, formerly Director of the Hunterian Museum, University of Glasgow, for copyright use of the Benin head which has long served as the AFSAAP logo and on this Review.

The African Studies Association of Australasia and the Pacific (AFSAAP) was formed in 1978 at a meeting convened at La Trobe University by Thomas Spear and David Dorward. The intention was to provide a mechanism whereby Africanists could keep in touch with each other and with current Africanist activities in Australia. The name was altered to the African Studies of Australasia and the Pacific in 1985. Membership of the Association was never conceived as narrowly academic and from its inception membership has included members of aid and NGO organisations, government departments, local African communities and others. The Association values its links with the broader community. Since 1978 the Association has organised an annual conference and published a newsletter that has grown into first the Review and Newsletter and now The Australasian Review of African Studies.
